President's Krausening

Paul Klammer

For many of us, this time of year is our peak brewing season. If one competes, there are a glut of competitions form late March to May that must be brewed for to have fresh beer on hand. Then, whether one competes or not, brewing now is simpler and faster thanks to it being winter. Ice cold tap water chills wort cleanly in minutes and shortens the brew day. Concerns about overheated fermentation are minimal since cool places can be found in the basement and around the outer walls of our homes. For me, by far the best thing about winter it is that I can make lots of lager. Due to the cold, I can manage lager ferment and conditioning temperatures easier and without tying up precious fermentation and storage space. When I first made lagers, I conditioned them in water filled coolers in an unheated room. Every 3 or 4 days, I chipped up a couple ice blocks made in my freezer to keep water in the coolers at 32f. That was a good deal of work to monitor and space was limited to 4 carboys in 2 coolers. Nowadays I condition in my garage in my spare fridge and several cheap (i.e., free) Styrofoam shipping boxes. The boxes are reinforced w/duct tape, lined with plastic bags, and filled w/water to smooth out temperature swings. Though a thin layer of ice has formed on them a couple times, I have yet to make an ice beer even during the coldest spells.

Whatever your methods, if you find the time and space to make some lagers this winter you'll be rewarded this summer. Nothing tops cooling off with one your ice-cold lagers beers on a searing hot summer day. Thank gosh for winter!

Paul will present triangle testing and blind experiments. Once we have that under our belts we'll see if we can use what we learn to show if we can pick out the one beer that is different among 3 samples. This will be a chance to gain some insight about things that can affect our taste perception and a tool to try to overcome those if we need to. For those who judge and compete, it may shed some light on why feedback you give and receive on entries can be inconsistent.

Pro-Am Brewing Opportunities

Mike Ontolchik has been coordinating with local breweries to set up brew days where club members and breweries will work together to create a beer to be served at a night out. If you've never done a pro-am brew before, it's lots of fun and a great opportunity to see how home brewing principles scale up. If you would like to be a part of one of these brew days, sign up here.

Other News

North Appalachian Homebrewing Championship

Last month I shared about this circuit that is being formed for the PA, Oh, W. VA., upstate N.Y., and western Maryland. Our competition committee is concerned that participation will overstress Son of Brewzilla which is already stretched to its limit and has chosen not to participate this year. Since beers entered in our comp will not count toward circuit scoring we will avoid lots of folks from distant place competing for our already scarce entries. Note that this has no effect on those want to compete in the circuit for individual awards. We will see how the circuit evolves and may consider it again next year.

Future meeting presentations

I'm planning meeting presentations/activities for a 2 year time frame. Based on past feedback and observations of the excellent work done by my predecessors, I will be trying to have informational presentations, expert presentations, regular member participation events like the big brew competition and the trivia events. My goal is to have informative as well as entertaining time that works for newer and advanced levels (mission impossible).

January Recap

January Meeting

We had a very robust conversation about hop chemistry and why hops behave differently under certain circumstances. Thank you to Doug Frye for this in-depth and informative presentation. Thank you also to Forrest City Brewing for bringing along some excellent growlers for us to try,
